An interior ministry communique charged the group had been supplied money and arms by the "Yanqui intelligence agency."

The communique said the accused had prepared several plans to kill Castro with arms and ammunition received especially for that purpose from the United States. But it gave details of only one, which it said was the main plot. That was to ambush Castro as he was driving around Ciudad Deportiva stadium on the outskirts of Havana.

FROM inside a garage across from the stadium, bazookas mounted on a jeep were to open fire on Castro and his escort while a car was to pull out of the garage and try to block the street, the communique said. Other plotters were to start throwing grenades at Castro from different points on the boulevard, it added.

The head of the plotters was identified as Luis Torroella, described as a 30-year-old former treasury ministry employee in the Batista regime who has an American wife.

The interior ministry said the two other men, Torroella were going to be used as internal supporters for Castro, teaching an in-
